

Take the StrataCare SuperHighway To the Lowest Total Cost of Ownership of your Bill Review Process.

Imagine your workers' comp bill review process as a toll road. On the surface, it would seem logical to choose the road with the least expensive toll to review each bill. However, if the journey along the way hasn't been designed to ensure accuracy, provide real-time information, or expedite workflow, then you're not on a highway engineered to save you real money down the road – after the specific bill review toll. The entire cost of your bill review process could end up costing you much more than you even realize. At StrataCare, that's what we call Total Cost of Ownership or TCO.

Best-in-class Insurance Companies, Third Party Administrators and Self-Insured Employers know that a meaningful return on investment is about TCO: the total cost of the process before, during and after bill review – not just cost per bill. That's why they travel on the StrataCare SuperHighway.

Our paperless workflow technology – including precision bill data capture – significantly reduces downstream costs such as claims adjuster time handling billing errors and filing of paper claims. Connecting managed care and utilization review to your bill review process means more accurate treatment and billing information that gets people back to work faster and with fewer provider complaints. Real-time database updates means maximum bill review savings and accuracy with lower reconsideration rates. All of these features along the road impact your TCO. At StrataCare, our state of the art workflow technology was designed to help you reach the lowest TCO possible.

Take the smartest route to maximum bill review savings at the toll-booth. Think TCO.
